 Bright Side
creative & production

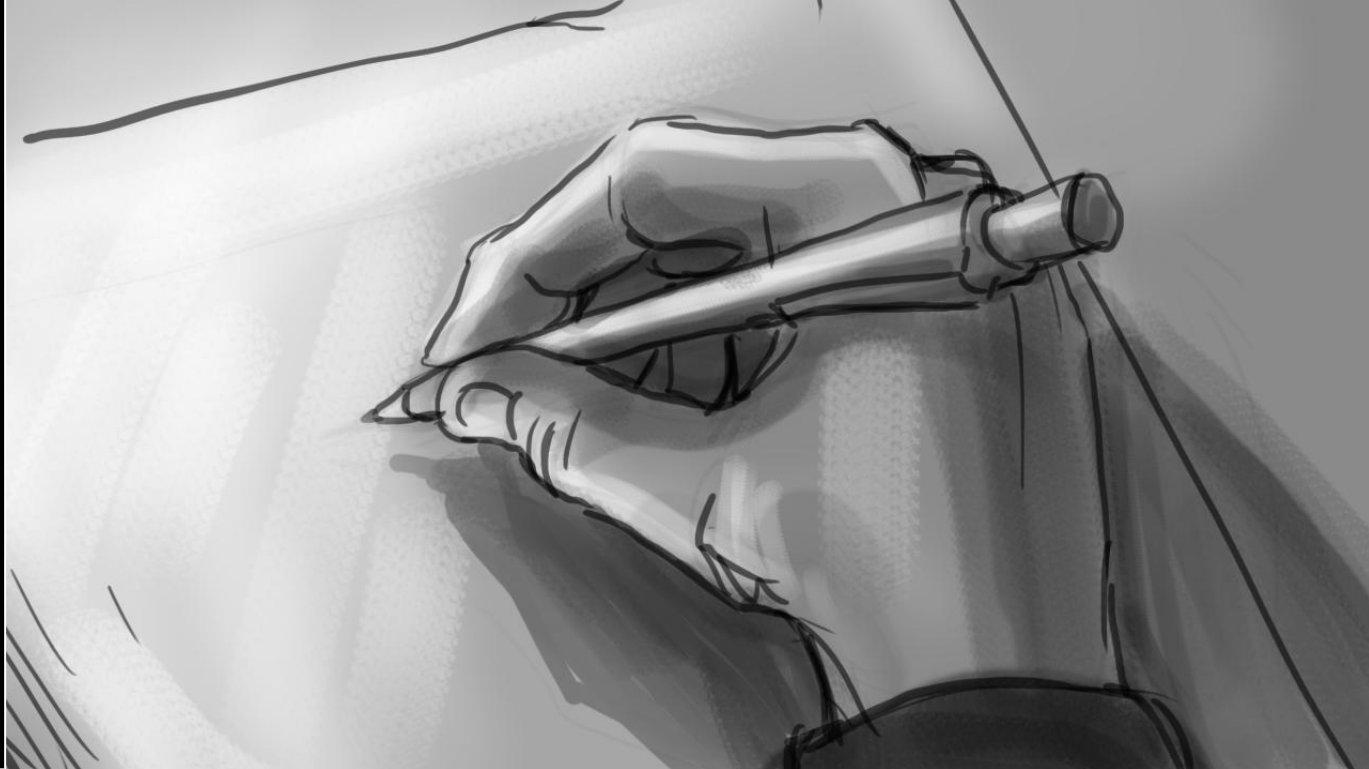

We see the apartment interior immersed in a soft twilight. The silhouette of the maestro appears. He sits down at the table.

The protagonist turns on a desk lamp.

We see him from the back. He holds a pencil in his hands, “motionless” over a blank paper.

After a moment of hesitation, he begins to draw.

The light changes from casual to dynamic. The rhythm accelerates as the protagonist draws.

(In this part of the story, there will be more frames; within the storyboard, we only indicate the principle).

We see how the protagonist draws a line that smoothly resembles the silhouette of a dress.

We see the silhouette profile of the protagonist.

We see that the line that previously resembled a dress now looks more like a piece of furniture. The light glides over the sketch.

The protagonist continues to draw. Dynamic light glides across the frame.

He crosses out what he has drawn.

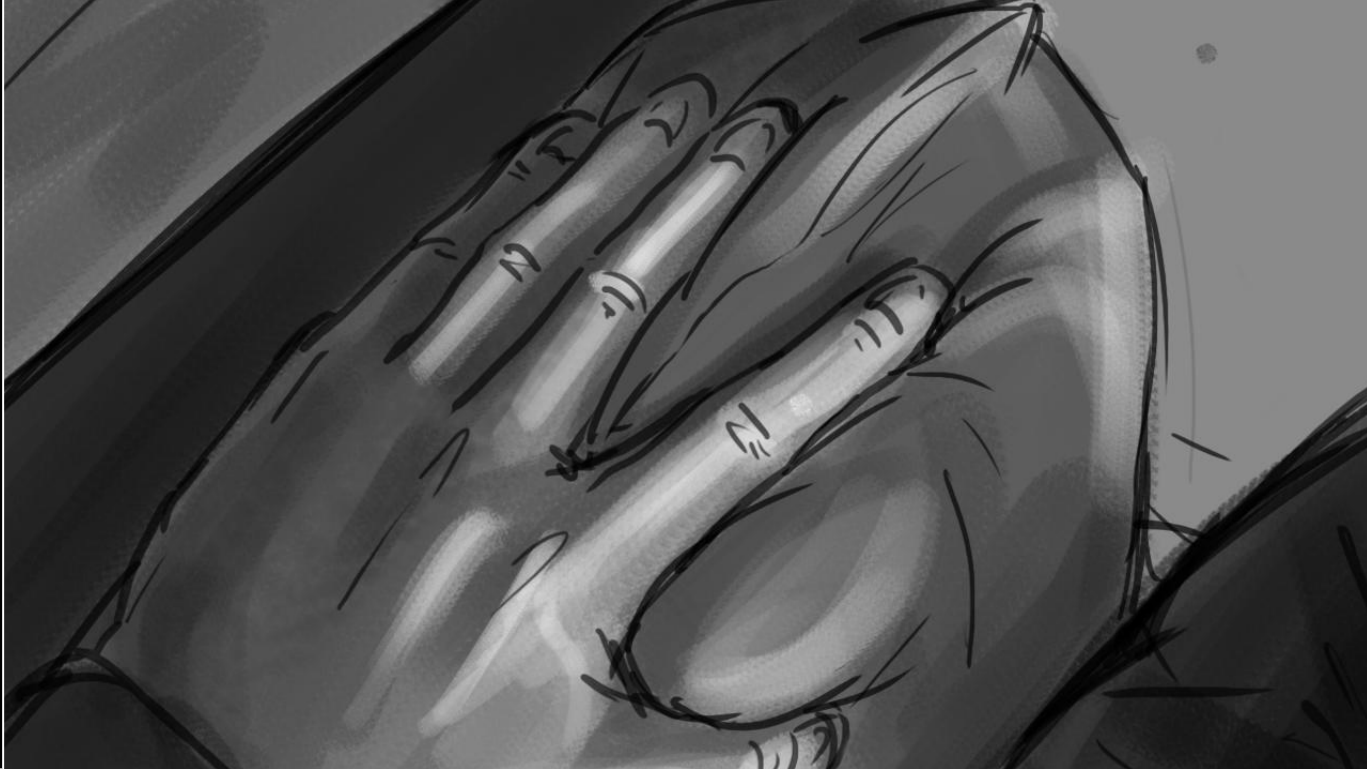

And throws out the paper.

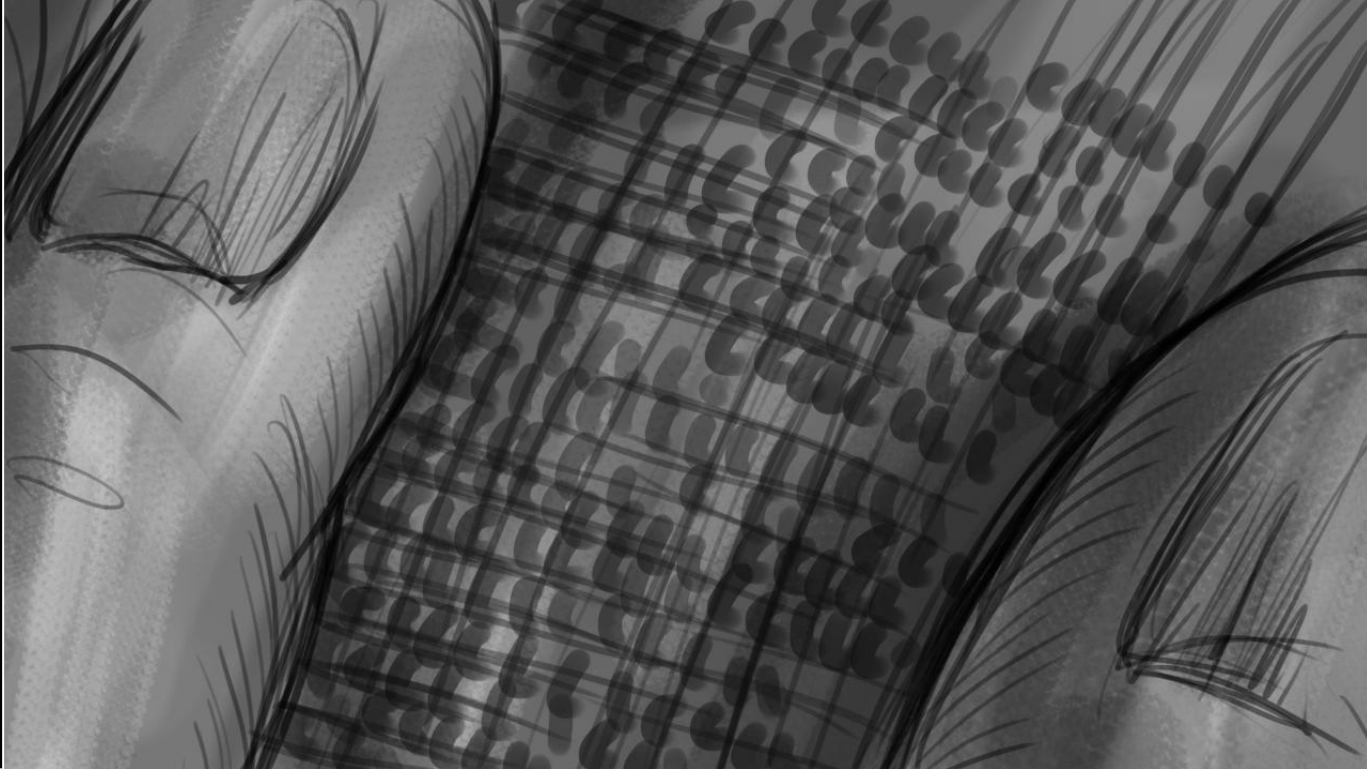

He leaves the table and sits on an armchair nearby.
Light becomes natural again.

Lost in thought, the protagonist looks down.

He runs his hand over the armrest, touching the fabric.

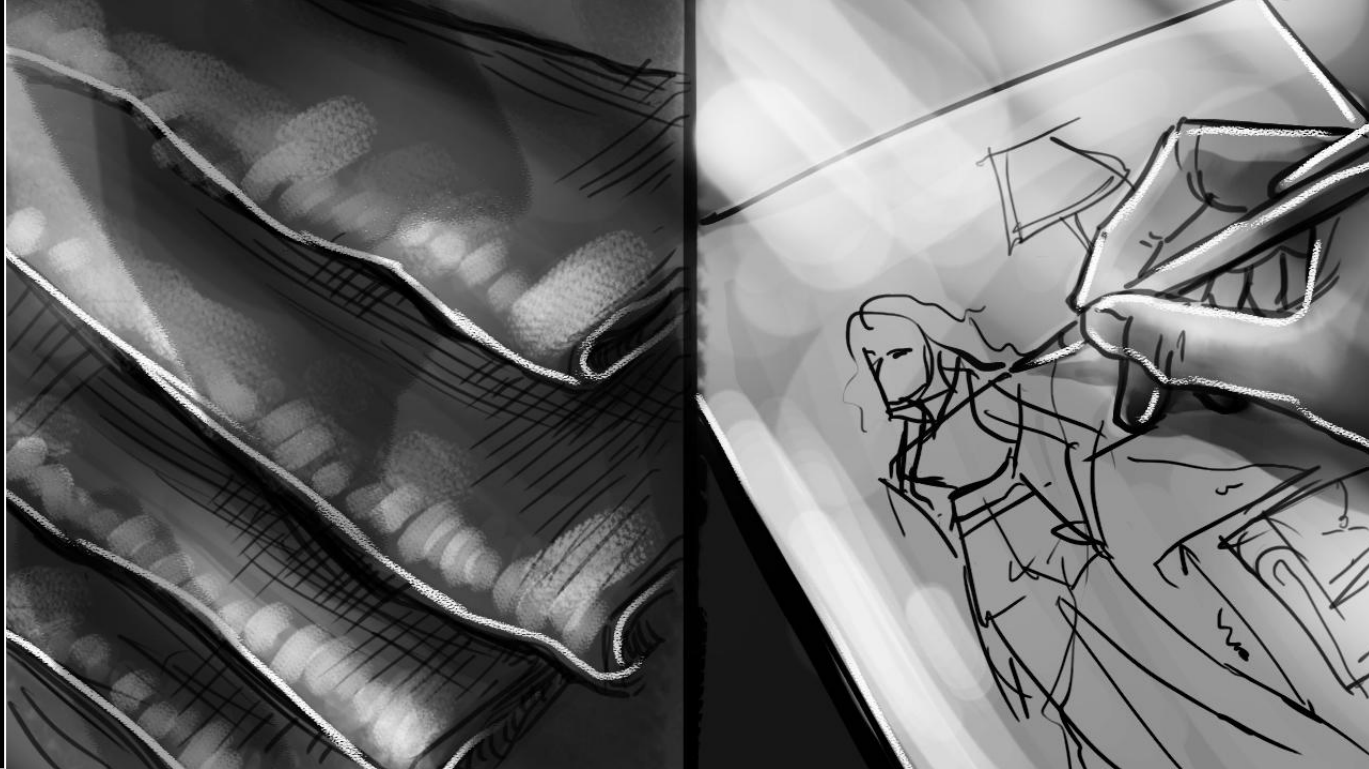

We see a macro plan.

He returns to the table again, we see how the rhythm accelerates again, the light becomes dynamic. The frames change.

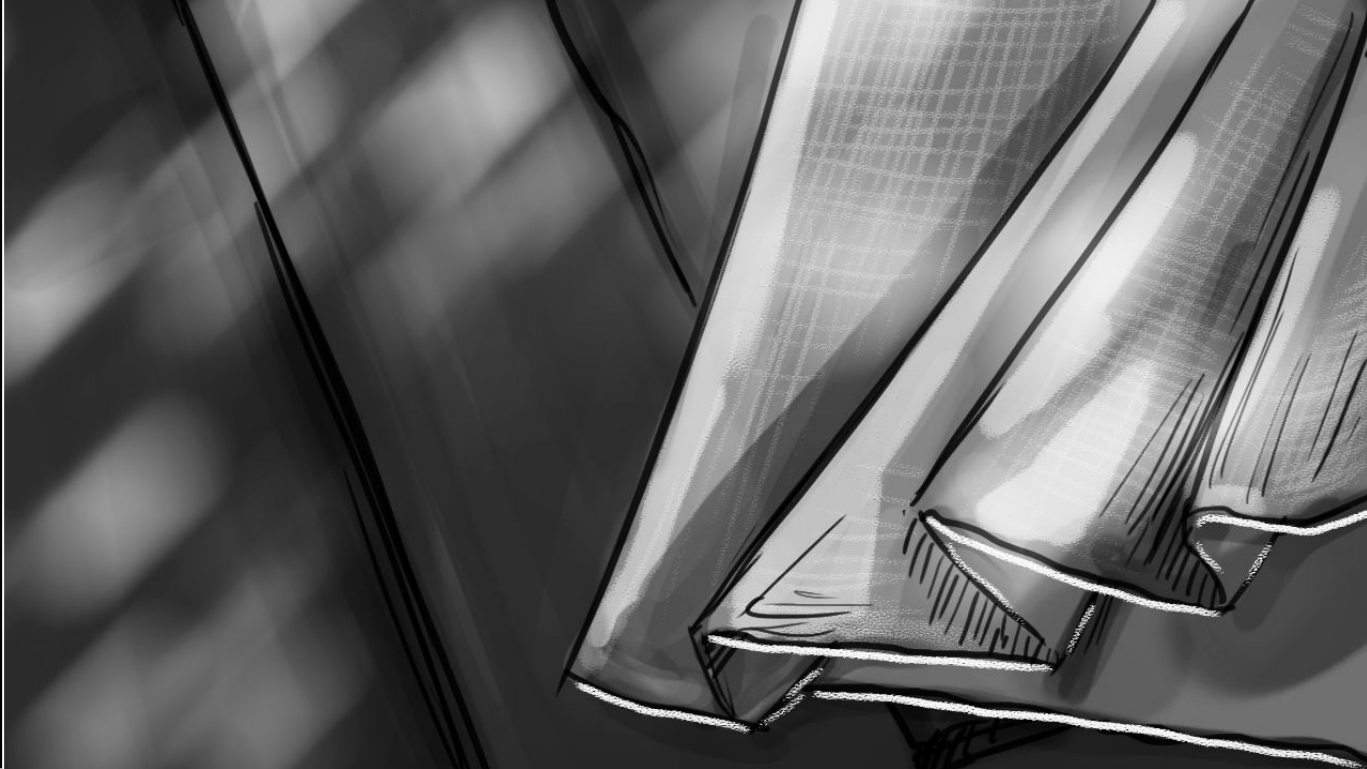

Here he works with the fabric on a table, not a roll.
The hero rolls out the fabric on the table.

We move on to the split screen. The protagonist draws, sorts out fabrics.

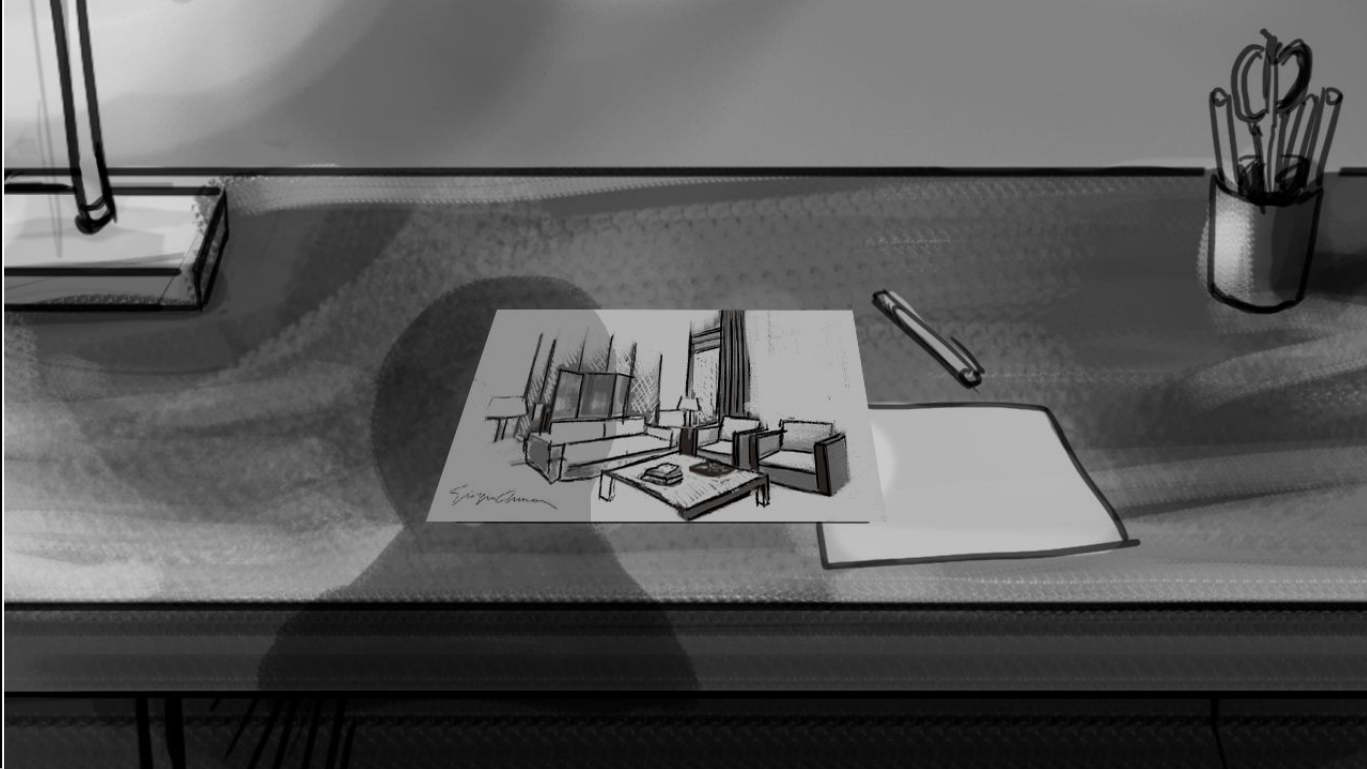

We see how he goes through the fabrics, see macro frames of fabrics, slide over them.

Flashes of light focus new textures, lines.

Finally, he puts his signature.
The rhythm slows down again.

We see a sketch on the table, the protagonist's shadow slips across the table, he leaves. The camera starts to zoom in.

We see that the hero drew a sketch of the interior.

We move on to the frames of the interior layout, dynamic light picks out a few details. We return the general plan — a logo appears on top of the image.
